Schenck Business Solutions gives $75,000 for new business building

WHITEWATER –Schenck Business Solutions and its partners have given a gift of $75,000 in support of student scholarships and the new College of Business and Economics Timothy J. Hyland Hall at the University of Wisconsin-Whitewater.

"This is another example of the tremendous ongoing support Schenck Business Solutions and its partners and employees provide to UW-Whitewater's College of Business & Economics. I want to thank Bill Goodman and Kermit Ellefson in particular for their leadership and dedication to their alma mater. The power of a UW-Whitewater business education is amply demonstrated through Schenck's current and immediate past presidents. Because of their generosity, and that of their partners and employees, many more UW-Whitewater graduates will follow in their footsteps."

"UW-Whitewater through its current and past professors and staff has been instrumental in developing the foundation for success for a large number of our professionals," Schenck Business Solutions President Bill Goodman '74 said. "We are pleased to provide financial support for the new College of Business and Economics building to help continue the accounting department's tradition of excellence while we continue to support the program through our involvement in student and faculty activities, scholarships and recruitment."

Schenck Business Solutions provides internships and scholarships for UW-Whitewater students, as well as participates in student organization activities. Company employees serve the college and the university in myriad capacities. Goodman sits on the Department of Accounting Advisory Board. Ellefson, a 1969 graduate and Schenck's immediate past president, serves on the UW-Whitewater Foundation Board.

One of the top 35 CPA and business consulting firms in the U.S., Schenck employs more than 500 employees, approximately 40 of whom are UW-Whitewater alumni. Headquartered in Appleton, Schenck has 10 offices throughout Wisconsin.

The new $41 million Timothy J. Hyland Hall will be completed by fall 2009. The building will include a state-of-the-art trading room, 38 hi-tech classrooms, a 400-seat auditorium, two 150-seat lecture halls, five computer labs, a center for entrepreneurial development, a global research center, a fiscal economic research center and an international studies room.
